I love helping mum of course and I learned to be independent from a very early age. Decision making, organisation and budgeting will all be really useful to me in future. But caring comes with responsibility and I often miss out on seeing friends. Plus if mum needs help and I have homework to do, the homework has to wait.

Young carers in school

There are, on average, two young carers in every classroom in every school in the UK. One of those carers will be having difficulties in their education because of their home situation:

- Research released in September 2018 by BBC News and the University of Nottingham suggests there could be about 800,000 children who are young carers in England. That is around one in five children aged 11-17 and an estimated 14,000 in Surrey.
- Half of young carers report that their caring role has a negative effect on their school work.
- Young carers leave school with the equivalent of 9 GCSE grades lower than their peers who have no caring role.
- One study reported that a half of the carers surveyed had missed school because of their caring role and a quarter had left without any GCSEs.
- A quarter of young carers said they were bullied at school because of their caring role.

With the right support, being a young carer brings benefits, and many express pride in their role.

The Angel Award

The Surrey Young Carers Angel Award has been developed by young carers, to reduce the barriers to their learning and achievement. These barriers can appear while a pupil is in infant school, and can persist into adulthood, restricting opportunities for further and higher education, and employment. The Angel Award aims to encourage and recognise all the great work that schools do in identifying and supporting their young carers.

Schools achieving the Angel Award will be recognised by pupils, families and professionals as a young carer friendly environment. This creates a culture of acceptance, understanding and support for its vulnerable pupils.

How the Award helps your school:

- The Angel award provides the opportunity for your school to gain recognition for good practice.
- Demonstrates that your school is meeting the needs of this vulnerable pupil group, specifically mentioned in Ofsted's Common Inspection Framework.
- Is broken down into 8 achievable standards, which are checked by SYC staff and young carers who are pupils at the school.
